Structure of an Argumentative Essay Outline

Introduction

The introduction in an argumentative essay will state to-the-point and relevant statements of the topic, and the objectives to some extent. It has three basic parts such as

1. Start with some interesting statements
2. Add background or history of the subject
3. Write thesis statement
4. Provide an objective- why are you writing this essay and what do you want to achieve?

Body

The body paragraphs contain the exact arguments along with the evidence. Your claims must be backed up with some solid past research which is done during creating the outline. The claims and their proofs will be written in the below mentioned format.

First claim to support thesis statement

- First evidence
- Second evidence

Second claim to support thesis statement

- First evidence
- Second evidence

Third claim to support thesis statement

- First evidence
- Second evidence

Arguments from another researcher

There will always be more arguments from the people who have chosen the same topic as yours. If you find a student/researcher following the same topic and giving arguments that do not make sense to you, you can add them in your essay and give your two cents on it.

- Mention the exact argument and a bit details about the evidence
- Share your opinion by mentioning your research and arguments

Conclusion

Close the topic by giving a final statement and hence your essay will be completed.
